STEVE CHARLESWORTH)	CASE 18945-E-04-3010
Involving certain employees of:)	DECISION 8828 - PECB
CITY OF SEATTLE)	ORDER OF DISMISSAL
)

On October 29, 2004, Steve Charlesworth filed a petition for investigation of a question concerning representation with the Public Employment Relations Commission, seeking to decertify the Washington State Council of County and City Employees as exclusive bargaining representative of certain employees employed by City of Seattle. The petition identified five employees, and described the unit as "all drivers classes".

A routine letter was mailed to the employer requesting a list of employees. In a response filed on November 23, 2004, the employer indicated that the petitioner is seeking decertification as to only a portion of a larger bargaining unit. The employer also supplied a copy of a collective bargaining agreement between the union and the employer which was in effect through December 31, 2004.

The petitioner was notified that his petition appeared to seek an inappropriate "severance-decertification" affecting only a portion of the employees who have historically been included in a much larger bargaining unit. The petitioner was given a period of 14 days in which to show cause why the petition should not be dismissed. To date, the petitioner has not responded.

DISCUSSION

A decertification petitioner must take the unit as he or she finds it. WAC 391-25-210(1) states:

In proceedings on a petition for "decertification" under WAC 391-25-070(6) (c) or 391-25-090 (2), the parties shall not be permitted to remove positions from or add positions to the existing bargaining unit.

The Commission had rejected "severance-decertification" petitions long before that rule was adopted. In City of Seattle, Decision 2612 (PECB, 1987), where an employee sought to decertify only a select group of employees from a larger bargaining unit, the Commission wrote:

The distinction between "decertification" of an incumbent exclusive bargaining representative and "severance" of a part of the existing bargaining unit is well founded and clear. Proceedings in the "decertification" category are characterized by employees seeking to be rid of their present union, with the result that they end up with no union representation. By contrast, cases in the "severance" category involve a petition of one organization seeking to carve out a separate bargaining unit from a larger unit historically represented by the same or another organization. In both types of cases, the Commission must honor statutory directive that it consider the "history of bargaining". RCW 41.56.060. A decertification petitioner does not have the prerogative to fashion a new bargaining unit or voting group, however. Rather, employees who seek to be rid of their union must take the existing unit as they find it and must move to decertify the context of the existing bargaining unit. Accordingly, petitions which, as here, simultaneously seek "severance" and "decertification" are precluded by controlling precedent of the Public Employ-See, City of Seattle, ment Relations Commission. Decision 1229-A (PECB, 1982) [Commission affirmed Executive Director's dismissal of "severance-decertification" petition seeking to remove some, but not all, of the employees from an existing bargaining unit of City of Seattle employees represented by Plumbers Local 32]; Valley General Hospital, Decision 1333 (PECB, 1982) [Executive Director dismissed "severance-decertification" petition]. The Commission's decisions on this subject are, in turn, based on precedents of the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB). Campbell Soup Co., 11 NLRB 234 (1055) [cited by Commission, with approval, as standing for the proposition that severance principles may not be applied to obtain decertification of part of an existing bargaining unit; Oakwood Tool & Engineering Co., 122 NLRB 812 (1958); Associated General Contractors of California, Inc., 209 NLRB 363 (1974).

A petition seeking a "severance-decertification" is void from the outset, and must be dismissed as such.
